Peter Parker photographs The Future of Travel Expo for the Daily Bugle.

Also attending the expo is someone who will play an important role in the events that follow.

The machine you see sitting on this table will change the way we travel.

Wow, that's cool.

I better take some pictures of it for the Daily Bugle.

Nice speech, professor. But, I have plans of my own for your Forever Engine. It will power my new Goblin Glider.

Two heroes get ready to spring into action.

Good thing I was here. Not many people can handle the Green Goblin.

Hey, Goblin, didn't your mommy teach you it's not polite to steal and run?

Joke all you want Spider-Man. Today, I'll have the last laugh.

Hang on, Spidey. I've got this!

Uh-oh, If I can't stop this train, innocent people will get hurt.

That should put on the breaks!

Watch out, Jolting Jacob! Here comes the Goblin again!

These doves were for the last day of the expo but if I don't stop him now there won't be anything to celebrate.

Jolting Jacob uses his powers to slow down the Green Goblin.

I hate to burst your bubble, Goblin but your crime spree is over.

A black and white line drawing of Spider-Man and a boy superhero at an expo. Spider-Man is on the right, hanging from a web and pointing towards the boy. The boy is on the left, wearing a mask and a suit with an atomic symbol, and is in a dynamic pose. They are in a large hall with a complex ceiling structure, spotlights, and people in the background. Two speech bubbles contain dialogue.

Now that the danger is over, let's check out the rest of the expo.

Okay, but swinging with you is the best way.

The End.
